THE PERSIMMON

Persimmon is a great native tree that can perform well in the toughest sites - It is drought tolerant and will thrive in soils with low fertility and areas with restricted root zones

Reliable yellow to red Fall color

Produces a large edible berry that ripens late September through October (although flavor is best after the first hard frost)

The female flower (pictured here), appears individually and is light green to ivory white - the male flowers appear in groups of three and are pink
